The Bloody Battle at Gainen's Mill-Magnif cont Spectacle of an Army Forming in Line of Battle—An Act of Kindness Mistaken by

set out on a tour of exploration on their own hook. The night was somewhat murky from the river mist, and these equine stragglers, in trotting along the road, trod upon the arm of one of the 17th, breaking it. Of course he started up with a shrill yell of pain, which caused the other sleepers to throw off their blankets and grab their rifles. The commotion frightened the horses, and they dashed ahead, knocking men down right and left. Then some one raised the cry, "The cavalry is upon us!" That added to the confusion, and the troops sprang over the feaces into the fields on either side of the road and began an indiscriminate firing at they knew not what, threatening the destrucbegan an indiscriminate firing at they knew not what, threatening the destruction of their own comrades. In vain were the shouts and entreaties of the officers to bring matters into order. The men were for the time being, deaf to all orders and remonstrances. A blind unreasoning terror had seized upon them, and you might as well have expestulated with lunatics on the silliness of their conduct. As far as my experience went, I was fully conscious I was acting like a fool, but for the life of me I couldn't help it. Finally the panic cooled down, and then it was ascertained that a number of the men had been hurt, but by great good fortune none mortally.

With the knowledge of the cause of the uproar came a revulsion of feeling, and roars of laughter succeeded the tramblings of fright. We could well understand after this experience what the panic among the federals at first Bull Run meant.

With the dawn of the morning we were awakened by the roar of cannon and the rattle of musketry across the river occasioned by Hill driving in the outlying forces of Fitz-John Porter's corps. It was as glorious a summer morning as men could wish for the purpose of killing each other. After eating our lobscouse and coffee the brigade crossed the bridge, and, turning to the right, across the fields, followed leisurely at about a mile distance in the wake of Hill's division, who was then driving the enemy full back sullently, resisting at every point where a good defense could be made, and I think it was after midday before we arrived at Gaines's house and saw the long lines of Porter's corps, interspersed with batteries crowning the creating of the hills acouple of miles away, in place for battle.

War is horrible, but it is magnificent also, and there could be no more heartstirring spectacle than to witness the advance of the long line of confederate brival and the policy of the defend of the long line of confederate brival and the policy of the condition of the long line of confederate brival and the policy of the long line of confederate brival and the policy of the long line of confederate brival and the policy of the condition of the long line of confederate brival and the policy of the case of the encounter through his dexterity in handling a knife. War is horrible, but it is magnificent also, and there could be no more heart reach at least 15,000; Cleveland runs besturing spectacle than to witness the advance of the long line of confederate brigades, as they deployed to the right and left with flags waving and bayonets glistening in the bright sunlight, taking up position opposite the lines of the foo, who, grim and silent almost, awaited the left with flags waving and bayoness glistening in the bright sunlight, taking up position opposite the lines of the foo, who, grim and silent almost, awaited the onset on the heights. To us who were at the time looking on in safety it was a sight of absorbing interest, and we anxiously looked to sae the heighings of the iously looked to see the beginning of the death grapple. Kemper's brigade in the battles of Williamsburg and the Seven Pines had lost heavily, and on that account in this fight Gen. Longstreet placed us in the rear line of the reserve.

Soon the battle was fully joined, and the charging yell of the confederates from one end of the lines to the other was plainly audible above the roar of cannon and muskery. Longstreet and Hill no iously looked to see the beginning of the plainly audible above the roar of cannon and musketry. Longstreet and Hill no doubt expected to make short work of Porter, and their attack was general and savage. But there were two serious obstacles in the way, apart from the fighting qualities of Porter's men. Immediately at the foot of the long, sloping hill on which the principal battery of the federals was planted ran ashallow stream, with banks sloping like a railroad cut, and along this natural fortification were stationed the flower of the regiments of two federal army. Again, nearly the entering the same many than the blonde shared, who would like to the same many than t stationed the lower of the regiments of two federal army. Again, nearly the en-tire right wing of the attacking force was subjected to the enfillading fire of the long range of batteries of Gen. McClellan stationed on the north bank of the Chicklong range of batteries of Gen. McClellan stationed on the north bank of the Chick-ahominy, and fearful execution was done by these gans, as their aim was not discomposed by any return fire. Again and again, with dauntless—nay, reckless—determination, were the brigades of Longstreet and Hill hurled against the federal fortifications, but at nearly every point they were bloodily repulsed, and even where a foothoid was gained it was not long held. As the day were on we, who were in reserve in a piece of woods, and could see but little of the seene of battle, grew-nervous and anxious over the prospect, especially as we could see, from the circumstance—a pretty good guide—of the aids and couriers riding silently and nervously, that the day was not going as well for our side as we would have liked. At last an aid to a Georgia general stopped a minute near us to blow his horse, and said he: "Boys, these Yankeas are fighting like hel to-day. I don't see that we have gained much so far." This was not inspiriting news, as may be imagined, especially as the entire reserve, excepting our brigade, had by this time been called up to the fighting line.

At length, a little after sundown, while the battle was still raging, our turn came, and soon we were double-ouleking to-

Just at this crisis the lady of the house longer of her head through the open door and cried out: "Hol my bullies. Hol my braves, We'll warm their jackets for 'om," which set the men to laughing. Throwing the brigade into line of battle Keuper, advanced to the creat of the hill above the natural fortification I have alluded to. He had just sent the order to his colonels to prepare to change, when he was notified by Longstreet to stand and hold his ground. In a faw minutes the existant yells of the confederates on the left and the silence of the big battery on the hill in front of us told us that the battle had been gained and that the battle had been gained and that the cnemy were in full retreat. The battle had been won, but, great heavens at what a sacrifice of gallant men. It was Jackson's flank movement that secured the victory, for, had the issue depended on the troops of Hill and Longstreet alone, the night would have descended on a repulse almost as bloody as that which subsequently occurred at Malvern Hill. Truth is truth.

It was a relief then when we were ordered to pack baggare, strike touts, and be ready to move at a moment's warning in light marching order. We had heard the sound of cannon firing and knew that a battle was in progress somewhere on our left. We knew also that the army was astrong as it was ever likely to be, and therefore locked forward to a fight with confidence in our ability to win the game. BOURBON BULLDOZERS.

Fraud, Intimidation, and Social Ostracism Do Their Work in North Carolina. RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 7.—The defeat of the coalitionists in this state was brought about by intimidation at the polls and threats of bodily injury and social ostracism. Never has there been anywhere in the south a fuller illustration of bour-bon intellerance and bourbon batred. THE REPUBLICAN correspondent heard this remark uttered one thousand times in this city on election day, if he heard it once: "Any white man who votes for York or Blaine to-day is not as good as the York or Blaine to-day is not as good as the meanest negro."

The weak-kneed ones who had contemplated voting the anti-bourbon ticket remained away from the polls, and many colored men in the western counties were scared out of their votes. At Wadesboro', Anson county, the home of Congressman R. T. Bennett, one man was killed and soveral seriously injured, and intimidation and outrage reigned supreme there. Attempts were even made in this city to prevent several departmental clerks from Washington from voting, although they have no other

If the loyal, honest people of this country submit very much longer to the political outrages that are committed at every election in the south it will be something very surprising to some minds.

Enameling is one of the oldest arts in the world; but that which may be termed painter's enamel, or enamels executed on a single surface, instead of incised surfaces, is a distinct outcome of the Rensissance, and was provoked by the desire to pessess imperishable reproductions for descritive purposes of the great works of art which had been painted in Italy by Leenarde da Vinci, by Rafaelle, and other successors. The movement began in the first year of the nincteenth coutury; among the first promoters of the new process was a glass promoters of the new process was a glass is now in the Clusy museum at Paris. The artist, by the express directions from his royal master, procured from Italy accurate copies of the best works of Raffselle, Giulio, Romano, and Pinnaticcio. and he also had recourse to the best draughtsman and sculptor of the French Renaissance, Jeau Cousin. The earlier works of Le Limousin had been medieval and almost Hyzantine nn atyle, but the contemplation of the Renaissance models sent him from Italy led him to imitate the purer and more correct forms of revived Greek art. His mode of treatment was essentially his own. The general effect of his work was brilliant, light, and harmonious, relieved and cheered by bright sky, blue tints, and turquoise blue sparkling on a shining ground. He was specially distinguishable by a bright yellow, which introduced into the hair of his personages and by pink and limpid flesh tints, which added to the feeling of delightful surprise excited by his enamels, the effect of which has been compared to the chameleon-like brilliancy of shot satin. No one knew so well as he how to make touches of gold with which to brighten the effect of his medallions on a black ground. During his years of active life his productiveness was astonishing, but his later enamels, which come down to

Yet, notwithstanding the multitudes of dishes, vases, ewers, goblets, portraits, and plaques in grissaile, cups and Lowis signed by his well-known monogram of "L. L.," sometimes accompanied by a flour de lys, the more important pieces of "The Limousin," soon grow rare. Many of his works have mysteriously disappeared. A large proportion of these vanished enamels were, in all probability, melted down during the stormy days of the first resolution in France, the perpetrators of the acts of vandalism being under the impression that the enamels were painted on gold and silver plate, whereas, in the great majority of instances, a substratum of copper was the material used. A very singular fate overtook no fewer than a heretofore appeared in print, and which seems to be quite appropos at this time. It will be remembered that shortly after he had sent his celebrated dispatch, stating that Hayes had 105 electoral votes and was elected. Harper's Weekly published a cartoon representing the Michigan senator as a Colosus standing over a deep chasm with each foot resting upon a rock, and holding in his hands an elephantlabeled "The Republican Party," which he had grasped firmly by the tail. Underneath was the inquiry, "What will he do with 12". will be do with it?"

A few days after the publication of this cartoon, Mr. Chaudler called upon President Grant with a friend upon a matter of official business, and, as he was going out, Gen. Grant called him back, and said: "By the way, Chaudier, what are you going to do with that elephant?"
"Well, Mr. President," was the reply of the man of nerve, "if those recks don't crumble, and they wont, and if that tail don't pull out, and it won't, I'll land that animal!"

The Limousin to paint twenty pictures of the extraordinary dimensions of five feet in length by four feet in height, illustrative of the heathen mythology. Twenty years were spent by the master enamelist of Limoges and his pupils in execution of these pictures, but Francis died in 1574, and not one of the twenty enameled pictures was ever delivered. They remained in the possession of the heirs of Leonard le Limousin until the outbreak of the revolution—a period of more than 200 years—and a French critic, writing in 1810, stared that the twenty enamels of extraordinary
